National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment
In western Scotland snow will be largely confined to levels above 300m. In southeast Scotland the snow will be largely confined to levels above 200m. In northeast Scotland snow is expected at all levels.

Whilst the main band of sleet and snow will move northeastwards across Scotland through Tuesday evening and the first part of Wednesday, there remains a risk of further sleet and snow following on from the southwest.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 18:00 on Tue, 06th Dec 2011 until 10:00 on Wed, 07th Dec 2011

Sleet and snow are expected during Tuesday evening and into Wednesday. The snow will be heavy in places, and the public should be aware that as this accumulates there could be some disruption to travel. Amounts of fresh snow could exceed 10cm in places.

In many low lying areas, particularly in the west and south of Scotland, rain and sleet are more likely than snow, but even here there is a low risk of snow causing some disruption.

Icy stretches on roads will be an additional hazard in many places.
